

ML systems generally need substantial amounts of data to train properly.

Creating good features is an essential step in building successful predictive models.

Transformer-based deep neural networks have completely changed the field of NLP.

When an algorithm memorizes the training set, we call this overfitting.